You might have visited the Rine's garden in previous garden walk, this garden is always being added to. Starting in the front there are plants for the local wildlife. The Weigela Florida 'wine and roses' is a big hit with the hummingbirds, and the butterflies enjoy the 'butterfly blue' delphinium. There are five Japanese maples of different varieties amongst the perennials in nicely carved out beds. Alongside is where the 5 water barrels are hooked up to the home's gutter system, along with water storage barrels which John uses exclusively to water the entire garden. There are two compost locations, a fruit and veggie garden, and oh yes, another beautiful tree, a dwarf variety European beech tree. John Rine is his own designer.

We bought our home 5 years ago, the house was surrounded by daylilies and juniper bushes. I have been slowly transforming it into a garden inspired by english country gardens, edible landscaping, and a bird and butterfly habitat. Fruit trees are just starting to bear fruit, the raised bed vegetable garden provide heirloom tomatoes. Berry bushes, milkweed, and bee balm bring birds and butterflies. Birdsong now drowns out the road noise.

Our garden began in 1970 and continues with love and a work in progress with flowers in bloom from March to October or November. Many potted plants over wintered for the yard include grapefruit tree, and passion flower among hundreds. The yard has annuals, perennials, hostas, begonias, herbs, flowering bushes, tomatoes, fairy garden, and a cat topiary. Lots of garden décor adds to the charm.

All work done by the owners from tree and grass farm. To a tiny pond and a glass house, brick edges and patio. We're in five garden clubs and compete in lots of their shows. Articles have been published in the Tribune and Chicago gardening magazine, and a few smaller ones. Favorite flowers are Lisianthus and rose and many more. To plant a garden is to believe in tomorrow and after both of us having serious health problems, each new day is a gift as well as every beautiful flower that blooms.
